

EXPORT POTENTIAL IN INDIA

Name of first author: Dr. Hitendra Bargal, Assistant Professor

Institution/Affiliation: Patel College of Science and Technology, Indore

Postal Address: 216, Usha Nagar Main Road, Indore (M.P.), India, Pin: 452009, Phone: +91-731-2484828, Mobile: +91-98272-03353

E-mail: f08hitendra@iimahd.ernet.in, harsh1087@rediffmail.com

Name of second author: Dr. Manasranjan Dashmishra, Reader

Institution/Affiliation: Shri Vaishnav Institute of Management, Indore

Postal Address: 290, Usha Nagar Extn., Near Ganesh Mandir, Indore (M.P.), India, Pin: 452009, Phone: +91-731-2486903, Mobile: +91-94071-80789

E-mail: allied.manas@svimi.org, dashmishra@gmail.com

Name of third author: Dr. Ashish Sharma, Lecturer

Institution/Affiliation: University Institute of Management, Rani Durgavati University, Jabalpur

Postal Address: Vinayak Tiraha, Near Jai Singh Parmar House, Adhartal, Jabalpur (M.P.), India, Pin: 482004, Phone: +91-761-4031502, Mobile: +91-94250-78049

E-mail: ashu72_sharma@rediffmail.com

—Abstract —

Exports constitute a key factor in economic development of a country for a developing country. It is essential to build up a sizeable export surplus. The rate of economic growth is largely determined by the rate at which a country can expand its export capacity. In recent years, India has been able to attract foreign investment on equity basis to set up in private as well as public sector, which have helped to generate employment, and has opened up huge export potential. All these, has been possible because of liberal economic policies framed by the Indian government from time to time. The globalization has virtually reduced the economic trade boundaries of each nation. But up to what extent this economic reform through export has accelerated the economic development of India is the basis issue to which the present paper is addressed. In this paper an effort has been made to compare the economic development from to export earnings before and after economic reforms.

Key Words: Export, Employment, Globalization